The coronavirus (COVID-19) crisis has had a terrible impact on the lives and health of many UK citizens, as well as severe economic consequences to businesses, staff and employees.

When the country gets back to work, the Government needs the social distance policy to carry on. Towns, cities, local authorities and business in the UK and around the world are making changes to their daily operations to accommodate a safe recovery from the Covid-19 emergency. The Government therefore expects organisations to make significant changes to their "open-air" environment to allow more space to pedestrians. Such changes will help embed altered behaviours and demonstrate the positive effects of recovery.

Many organisations have already begun to make necessary changes to ensure support and recovery from the COVID-19 emergency. To instil good practice in social distancing the Government has created a schedule of signs to promote the message and maintain the positive progression to recovery. The signs below are available from Limelight Signs in a variety of options and sizes:
